Help your clients redefine retirement planning to meet rising economic challenges.

Inflation and interest rates are having wide-ranging impacts, affecting not only how people spend money today but also how they save for the future. According to the ninth annual Advisor Authority survey, powered by the Nationwide Retirement Institute®, investors are more likely to spend less and shift their retirement outlook because of the current economic challenges they face.

For many people, their financial future isn’t what they thought it would be. More than six in ten investors (61%) say their expectations for retirement have changed significantly in the last five years.

Economic uncertainty is changing the way many investors view and plan for retirement.

49% of investors say their dreams for retirement have been delayed, altered or cancelled because of economic conditions seen in the last five years.

Financial professionals can help clients get on track to their retirement goals.

Nearly half of financial professionals (48%) say the rising cost of living has influenced their clients to rethink or redefine their retirement planning strategies.

Investors are turning to their paid financial professionals most frequently for guidance on these retirement planning topics:

- 39% Tax planning strategies
- 38% Accumulating enough savings to enter or stay retired
- 26% Converting accumulated savings into retirement income
- 22% Paying for healthcare in retirement
- 20% Legacy planning
