

Planning your unique retirement

Get to know the diverse financial challenges that women face as they prepare for retirement.

Women tend to spend less time in the workforce, accumulate less lifetime savings, live longer and invest more conservatively than men. What can you do to get prepared?

The first step in planning for retirement is thinking about the type of retirement you'd like to have and where you'd like to spend it. This can help your financial professional better understand your priorities. Consider these points:

Envision your retirement

What are important things your financial professional should know about the lifestyle you'd like to have?

Set your income goal

What income sources do you expect to have in retirement?

Consider your potential medical/long-term care needs

Do you have a medical history that could affect your health? How would you like to be cared for in your late retirement years?

Will you leave a legacy?

Would you like to leave a financial legacy through a donation or inheritance for your family?
